Street trees build safe, strong neighborhoods

Research has shown that communities with trees are stronger. People say they feel safer and like where they are living more than in neighborhoods that have a few trees.

The Blue Cross Blues

Editor:

I want to underscore and applaud Emily Dalton's column on the insurance mess in which we are now involved ("The Insurance Leech," June 19). I am also a provider for Anthem Blue Cross. It has been five months since I have been paid for some of my clients. When I call them I am "robotted" through a morass of messages and choices. I am instructed to go to a website on which I must "click" in responses.

However, since I use Google Chrome I cannot access this site. It's only accessible through Explorer. My bad. I spend hours of time (my time) hassling with mistakes made by people who have no idea of diagnostics nor the pain some of my clients are suffering. I cannot, in good faith, deny people who have paid for their policies but it is fast becoming clear that it takes more of my time to collect on what is owed to me than the time I am spending with the clients I serve. This is abhorrent. If you are insured by Anthem let them know your concerns. And be aware, it will all change in three years and your premiums most likely will increase.

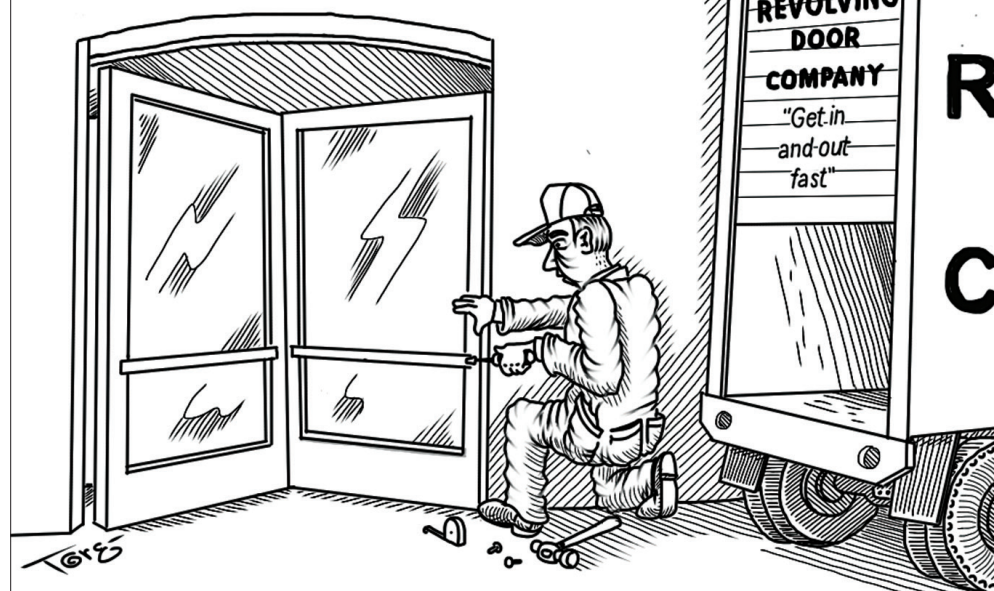

Ginni Hassrick, Eureka

Editor:

Thank you for bringing attention to some of the dishonest practices of Anthem Blue cross and Blue Shield. Some of these practices were in place before Obamacare. A couple of years ago I was applying for a Blue Shield plan and I was directed to a list of providers in this area. I knew many of them had not been practicing at the location given for over 10 years and some were not even seeing their existing patients for years. Some have not practiced anywhere. I had pointed that out to them previously that these people were not available. They promise what they cannot deliver to get people to sign up to their plans. It would be fair if they were forced to pay the bills of the practitioners they list in their directory.

I never needed them to cover anything but they are charging me much more than I was told I was going to pay. They took the money right out of my credit card. I tried to resolve this several times over the phone. After entering a lot of information they always disconnected me the first time. The second time I was able to get through. I would have to have at least 45 minutes available to try to get through to them. I wanted to have what we agreed upon verified by an email. They said that they were not capable of sending emails. Then it was like I never made the call as things would go on as if I never called. Any other business is capable of sending emails and confirming things. Finally I closed that credit card and enrolled in Medicare. It is a shame that the government encourages people to use a company that treated people so badly. The more stress people are in the higher their health care costs usually are.

John Yamas, Arcata

Editor:

As a nurse who has lived in this community for over 30 years I can tell you I am truly discouraged as I have watched Medicare and private insurance companies every year cut reimbursement rates not just to our doctors but to every medical provider we have, including physical therapists and hospitals.

The only way we can fix this is to have our Congress on Medicare. Why do they get a handsome health insurance that allows them to use Bethesda Naval Hospital and other medical agencies at the drop of a hat while our troops get TriCare and struggle to get medical approved?

It is a national disgrace.

If Congress was on Medicare, reimbursement rates would climb, doctors

Comment of the Week

"I am going to great expense and logistical turmoil to have a hip replacement out of Humboldt because there is not a single local orthopedic surgeon in the network. Not one! And now, after going through all the trouble of setting up the surgery elsewhere, I discover that THAT surgeon isn't in the network either! Never mind that he's listed on their website."

— "Linda Mitchell" sharing her own troubles with Covered California on the Journal's website.

Thadeus Greenson compares local citizens, upset about a proposed ordinance that would prohibit them from growing their own medicine, to oil company executives bent on fracking.

In an effort to match this level of hyperbole I ask: What If homeowners in Willow Creek were complaining about Jews, and the distinctive smell of gefilte fish, not to mention the impacts of visible mezuzahs and menorahs? Would the county be considering an ordinance to treat Jews like any other destructive, polluting and extractive industry?

The ordinance in question would prohibit private citizens, living in residential neighborhoods, from producing the medicine they need. These people didn't ask to get glaucoma, cancer, epilepsy or any number of other serious conditions. If the county won't provide these people with free medical marijuana, the county should, at least, not bother patients who grow their own medicine, in their own yard, regardless of size.

Whether it's lawn mower exhaust, toxic fumes from dryer vents, smoky barbecue grills or trucks left idling in the driveway, suburban residents constantly assault each other with foul smelling clouds of toxic gas. If medical marijuana patients have to put up with their neighbor's leaf blowers and dryer fumes, those neighbors can also tolerate the non-toxic smell of marijuana.

To stop medical marijuana patients from growing more than they need, and diverting the surplus into the black market, the obvious solution is complete legalization. Until then, we should understand why anyone involved with marijuana in any way, would be very cautious about revealing their identity, considering the long history of government persecution that marijuana users have endured, and the social prejudice against them that remains.

would be able to make a decent living. I know personally that most primary care doctors in private practice are teetering on leaving. They have so much overhead that they no longer make any profit at all.

We as Americans need to demand that Congress stop acting like special kings and have the same health insurance we have.

It would be a start on the right track. So email your congressman now!

Good Riddance

Just like all the self-absorbed TV gasbags and hucksters that came before him, Corky's just too full of himself to even take notice of just how much he isn't going to be missed ("Bye Folks," May 29).

On second thought, I guess I do owe the man. If it hadn't been for his early obnoxious commercial appearances, I might never had gotten around to asking my e-savvy son-in-law to show me how to set up my TIVO so I could fast-forward through any and all of his commercials whenever they showed up on a program I was watching or taping.

Bye bye, Corky. No, you won't be missed. And watch out that that studio taping room door doesn't hit you on the butt on your way out.

Awkward Moment

Morris Graves Museum charts new course in tough times

By Thadeus Greenson

thad@northcoastjournal.com

The photographs are instantly relatable and simultaneously mockable. There are the matching outfits, shirtless potbellies, screaming children and awkwardly posed studio glossies intermixed with candid snapped at the perfectly inopportune time. The best of them capture not just a family, but an era. One collection-defining shot — dubbed “the Magnet” — features a man in his 30s with a tightly trimmed beard and manicured mullet, shirtless with a tuft of chest hair peeking out of his open suede jacket as he cradles a pair of neck-tie wearing cats in his arms.

The pictures are part of the Awkward Family Photos collection, which started in 2009 as a modest blog that invited folks to share their uncomfortable family moments caught on film. The site went viral. Now, 200 of the collection's finest are on exhibit at Santa Monica's California Heritage Museum. Their next stop? Eureka's Morris Graves Museum of Art, which will become just the third venue in the country to host the exhibit. It's a coup for the small museum, and it comes amid the Humboldt Arts Council's ongoing effort to draw in a younger, more diverse crowd.

“We need to humanize the museum,” explains Executive Director Jemima Harr. “We need to unite the community with us in different ways than we have in the past.”

The effort to reshape the Morris Graves Museum of Art and its following was borne out of necessity.

Humboldt County prides itself on being an artist community, but its flagship arts institution is struggling to make ends meet. Hammered by the Great Recession, the Humboldt Arts Council — which runs the Morris Graves Museum of Art, maintains the Romano Gabriel Sculpture Garden and offers a host of educational programs — has yet to claw its way back to financial stability. “We don't really want to cry wolf,” says the council's board president, Sally Arnot. “But there's just not a lot of money.”

According to the nonprofit Guidestar — which acts as a kind of nonprofit watchdog by compiling publicly available information about an organization's mission, programs and finances — the Humboldt Arts Council was almost $25,000 in the red in the 2012-2013 fiscal year, bringing in $291,087 in total revenue compared to $315,774 in total expenses. While that might not sound terrible, the down year came on the heels of at least four others, during which the organization scrambled to cut expenses and bring its finances in line. There's no fat left to trim, says Harr, adding that if revenue doesn't pick up soon, HAC will have to start cutting programs.

The result of a near-perfect storm of factors, HAC's fiscal woes are pushing the organization to reinvent itself, get younger and attempt to reconnect with the community it has served for more than 40 years.

Harr says that since the start of the recession in 2008, the museum has seen its membership cut in half. Of the members that do remain, Harr explains that many folks who were $100-members in 2009 are $30-members today. Similarly, sales from the gallery, exhibitions and other events have dropped by 50 percent in recent years. “People just don't have that expendable income to buy those luxuries in life," Harr says.

Arnot says the recession has also increased the need for social service nonprofits. With many families looking at tight budgets and needing to reduce their charitable contributions, Arnot says some are left with tough choices. "I see arts education as humanizing our community and being so enriching for the quality of life here," she says. "But, if you're competing with blankets and food, there's a big difference."

Grant funding streams have similarly dried, with governments and agencies across the nation seeing increased applications for a depleted pool of funds. Harr says HAC has been fortunate to get some funding annually from the California Arts Council, but adds the agency always asks why HAC doesn't receive more local governmental support. With both Humboldt County and the city of Eureka struggling in the face of budget deficits, Harr says, "We understand, it's just not in the budget."

Compounding the problem, Harr says, is the lack of flexibility on the other side of the budget ledger. In 1996, HAC began the process of taking over Eureka's old Carnegie Free Library, which was built in 1902 and landed on the National Register of Historic Places in 1986. The acquisition — which saw a grassroots fundraising campaign pull in $1.2 million to renovate, restore and retrofit the building — culminated in the opening of the Morris Graves Museum of Art on New Year's Day 2000. The building is a local gem and beautifully houses the museum's exhibits. But it's a huge cost to maintain, with utility bills that Harr describes as "outrageous."

HAC has also amassed a large collection ranging from hundreds of relics that capture the history of the area to the works of the museum's namesake, Morris Graves. In 2012, HAC took ownership of the Romano Gabriel Sculpture Garden, which is on display at 315 Second Street in Eureka and which Harr calls "the second greatest piece of folk art in California, and possibly even the nation." But HAC's sprawling collection comes with upkeep and insurance costs. "It costs $1,000 a day to open the doors here," says Harr in a phone interview from the museum. "That covers everything from utilities and water to professional staff and insurance for the collection."

Nationwide, museums have been similarly struggling since the recession hit and many have yet to recover their footing. There's also the national trend of declining attendance. According to a survey by the National Endowment for the Arts, only 21 percent of adults in the United States visited a museum or art gallery in 2012, down from 26.5 percent in 2002. Museums were least popular among the nation's least educated, the survey found, with fewer than 10 percent of people who finished their education with a high school diploma attending a museum during the year. In contrast, the survey found 37.2 percent of college graduates made it to a museum in 2012. In Humboldt County — where only 26.4 percent of the population has a college degree, according to the U.S. Census — those numbers paint a dire picture.

One of the answers, Arnot and Harr hope, is "blockbuster shows," like the Awkward Family Photos exhibit, that appeal to demographics that don't usually frequent the museum. "If that brings a whole new group of folks into the museum and educates them about what the museum is all about, about our children's programs, then it's a win-win for us," Arnot says. Part of the appeal of a show like this, Harr says, is it's not fine art and it's not traditional. "I think this is something that's going to bring people far and wide here," she says.

But attendance is only part of the equation. HAC also needs money. The admission fee Morris Graves began charging in January — $5 for adults, $2 for seniors and students — so far has done little to stem the tide of budgetary red ink. If the community wants HAC to maintain all its various offerings, it needs to step up to the plate.

"We just need the community support to be here," she says. "We're not a luxury. We're an essential component of what this community's about, but we can't do it on our own." Arnot points out that folks wanting to lend a helping hand will have plenty of opportunities in the near future: There's the June 28 "Art Splurge," when the museum will exhibit and sell off hundreds of 5-by-7-inch works for $150 apiece while treating visitors to appetizers and refreshments; the Sept. 20 Outstanding Contributions to the Arts Award banquet; and the ongoing "Circle of $100" membership drive, which offers two family memberships to Morris Graves for $100, the idea being a family can purchase itself a membership and give away another.

Arnot has been with HAC since its inception in 1971 and while the organization faces challenges that are very real, she says she's optimistic about its future.

"We go through hard times in life, but I think we'll be fine if we just keep plodding on and working and making an attempt to be innovative and creative," she says. "That's the secret to any business and, let's face it, a nonprofit needs to operate like a business." ●

Ryan Burns in the Lost Coast Outpost questioned the appropriateness of Honest Engine, the name and logo of a Eureka car repair shop, after it appeared prominently in an advertisement beneath my last column ("Art Attack," May 29). That column was about a painting that many people deemed to be offensive to Latino students and staff at Humboldt State University.

It turns out that Honest Engine owner

Robert Neely wrote Burns to say he decided to discontinue use of the logo, after almost four decades, because he now realizes it offends some people, which he never meant to do.

One of the hundreds of comments on Burns' post complained that parents don't seem to teach the "old rhyme" anymore about how sticks and stones break bones but words won't hurt. I do teach that to my daughter, but we both know it isn't true. Words do hurt and the psychological pain festers.

On June 18, the Seattle Times announced it would ban the name Redskins from the paper. Sports Editor Don Shelton said the paper decided 20 years ago that the name was offensive enough that it would minimize its use to just one mention per article and keep it out of headlines and photo captions. He noted that colleges and high schools across the country have changed offensive team names and mascots over the past decades. Stanford went from Indians to Cardinals, for example. His column received more than 1,500 comments, many from people announcing they would ban the Times from their homes.

Yahoo Sports reported that the Cleveland Indians are quietly "reducing" the visibility of Chief Wahoo, their smiling, red-faced Indian logo, which I found so offensive I never liked watching Oakland play them. The team is replacing its logo with a big C on road caps and minimizing its use in publicity.

I find it surprising how impassioned people get about logos and mascots. They protect them as time-honored traditions. A tradition is a practice we have that no longer has any justification other than, it's what we do. If it is a practice that makes everyone happy, then that justifies continuing the practice. But if the practice causes harm, that is no justification to continue it. We drop traditions all the time. We create new ones. Traditions should bring people together, not divide them. Why carry on a practice that offends people when you can create a new one of your own that offends no one?

I grew up in a religious household. We honored so many traditions that it is hard for me to remember them all. Some were ridiculous. We kept kosher and that meant we had eight sets of plates in our house — the everyday dairy and meat plates, the good dairy and meat plates, and as many more plates just for Passover. Meanwhile, when we brought in Kentucky Fried Chicken or Chinese food (we were Kosher but c'mon ...) we ate on paper plates. I can't believe there is any God so petty he would care about our plates. Someone, somewhere, made up those crazy Kosher rules, probably for some good reason at the time.

So many of my family traditions were based on religion that abandoning them left few to celebrate with my daughter. But it occurred to me that we could create our own traditions. We have a great one we started some years ago at Thanksgiving. We took our pumpkins left over from Halloween and rolled them down a big hill to see who could roll one the farthest.

Now everyone who comes to Thanksgiving brings pumpkins and we roll dozens of them down the hill. We call it the Great Pumpkin Roll. If one day, a pumpkin we roll hurts someone or we find the practice disparages some culture, we will stop doing it. And that won't ruin our world. We'll find something else that's fun for all.

As someone who is a staunch defender of our First Amendment freedom of expression, political correctness should creep me out. After all, self-censorship can be as dangerous as forced censorship. When you self-censor out of fear I think it is dangerous. But not when you censor yourself out of courtesy for those around you.

My husband and I try to live our life by a moral code: We call it, "What's it to us?" Or when posed to other people, "What's it to you?" If someone asks us for something and it won't cost us anything or make us go out of our way very much and it can help them out, or make them feel better, then, what's it to us? Why not help when you can? Why not try to make someone feel better when it doesn't cost you?

I've never understood how some people will stand their ground when it doesn't benefit them materially and it hurts someone else. During the civil rights movement, many white business owners in Birmingham stood their ground rather than change how they treated black people, even in the face of a costly boycott by black shoppers. Why did they do that? That floors me.

I can't understand why, when faced with two or more options, some people will choose the one that causes harm rather than the one that could prevent it.

I think Robert Neely didn't realize how offensive his logo was because most people realized it wasn't worth a fight. That doesn't mean it didn't make them feel uncomfortable. To his credit, once it was pointed out to him how people feel, Neely chose to change rather than fight.

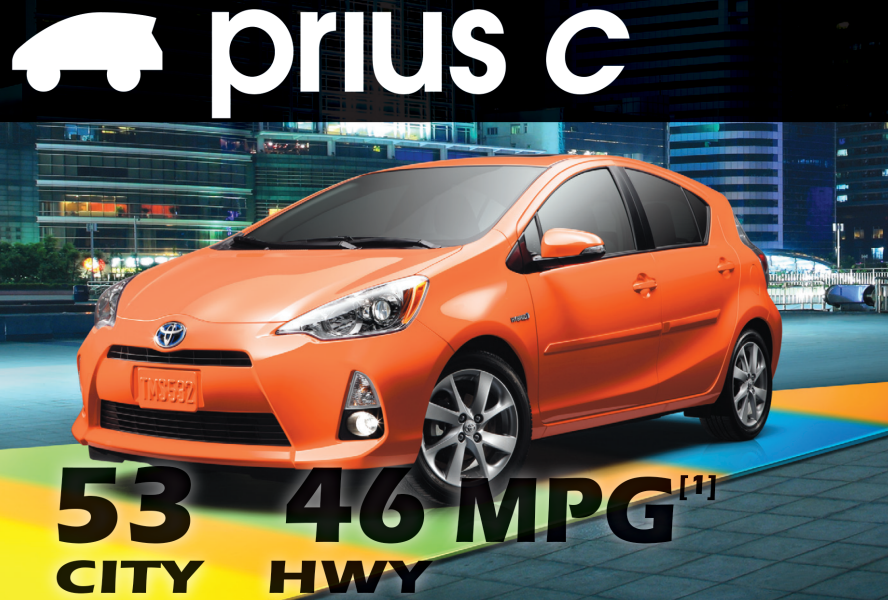

Political correctness becomes a big deal when people make it a big deal. If you view it as common courtesy to the people around you — your friends, neighbors, customers, co-workers, employees and fellow fans — it isn't such a big deal.

Now let's talk about Lou Seal. That mascot really creeps me out. And then someone should take on Uncle Sam. How creepy is that old guy?

THE WEEK IN WEED

DREW HYLAND

Stoned Yoni

By Grant Scott-Goforth

Is there anything weed can't make better?

In the rush to imbue every last product imaginable with marijuana, we've seen creative candies, coffee, topical treatments, etc., etc. We've likely not seen the end of infusion-mania, but maybe this'll make entrepreneurs stop for a moment and take a good, long look in the mirror.

The California-based Foria claims to be the first pot-infused vaginal lubricant on the market, and — because I'm writing this at work — I'm going to take their word for it. Is the “all natural sensual enhancement oil thoughtfully designed for women” being marketed to the experienced and enlightened woman who wants to achieve climax without having to stop and roll a new joint?

A “teaser” video on Foria's website features an American Apparel type writhing around in soft-focus on white sheets intercut with subtly metaphorical images of a wave building on the ocean.

Dangerous Minds writer Amber Frost puts it best in her post titled “Medical Marijuana Sex Lube: Probably Not So Medical” when she muses: “From the day spa aesthetic of the website to the look of the testimonials in the video below, I'd say Foria is subtly being marketed to women experiencing a drop in hormones or some level of female sexual dysfunction. The use of the word ‘aphrodisiac’ is a dead giveaway.”

Have doubts about its effectiveness? The site's testimonial video features three attractive, well-dressed women describing their skeptical-cum-transitory experiences using the THC-laden lubricant to “unlock profound pleasures.”

It's unclear if the stuff is intended to get you stoned, but Kate Hakala of Nerve.com spoke to Foria founder Mathew Gerson, who was about as informative as the one-name testimonials promising multiple orgasms and sexual awakening. Responses to the product vary, Gerson told Nerve, “but he was hesitant to share with us what some of these effects definitively are, and that's partially because currently there is no standardization of medical marijuana dosing, and no literature or FDA studies on taking such a product through the vagina.”

While Gerson claims the effects are genitally localized and forego the typical recreationally sought-after effects of pot, Hakala in her story makes the succinct point: “We're still not really sure how a vagina metabolizes pot.”

Lest you think the lube is some bizarre aphrodisiac doomed to obscurity, the $88-per-bottle purported sexual stimulant (Gerson also sells vegan condoms) has been featured on the websites of luminary women's magazines like Shape and Cosmopolitan. The life-enhancing list-making prowess of these “we'll-type-anything-once” magazines means the uncluttered-by-science goop has a real shot at making it onto the medicine cabinet shelves of women nationwide.

After, mind you, an approval period. You must prove to the online retailer that you possess a valid 215 card and join the Foria collective, after which you can purchase it online. It typically takes a few days for a response, according to the website. If only all questionable sexual choices required a 3-day waiting period. ●

CRIME

Willow Creek Hit-and-Run

A pedestrian killed in a hit-and-run collision in Willow Creek on June 21 was identified as 22-year-old Manuel Alejandro Garcia.

Humboldt County Deputy Coroner Roy Horton said Garcia appeared to have been walking on the shoulder of the west-bound lane of State Route 299, where it makes a sweeping left-hand turn in front of Buddy's Auto Center, when he was hit. Horton said Garcia lived close by with his mother and brother, and appears to have been out walking his dog.

"I found a dog leash and chain at the scene," Horton said, adding that the dog returned to Garcia's home after the accident, which occurred at about 10 p.m. Saturday.

The California Highway Patrol responded to a call reporting the accident and found Garcia dead, but the driver had fled the scene. A short time later, officers found a car believed to have been involved in the accident parked behind Ray's Market in Willow Creek. With the help of a dog from the Arcata Police Department, officers spent four hours searching the scene but were unable to locate the driver.

California Highway Patrol officer Michael Berry said officers used the vehicle's registration information to track down its suspected driver, Daniel Roy Jones, 36, of Arcata, who was arrested at his home without incident at about 11:30 Sunday morning and booked into jail on suspicion of driving under the influence, hit and run, manslaughter and delaying or obstructing an officer.

Horton said Garcia was found without any identification, appearing to have just left the house to take his dog for a quick walk, and was logged as a John Doe. Sunday morning, Horton said Garcia's mother approached a CHP information booth at Redwood Acres Fair and spoke with an officer, saying her son hadn't come home Saturday night and she was worried about him. The officer then notified Horton. "That's how we identified him," Horton said, adding that Garcia's family was crushed by the news. "They're just beside themselves."

Call For Marten Info

Have some informed thoughts on what to do about that fluffy, shy, seldom-seen, sharp-toothed critter the Humboldt marten? Perhaps a genetic study you've been hoarding, waiting for the right time to haul it out?

U.S. Fish and Wildlife says now's the time to share. It's opened a 45-day scoping session to gather yet more information on the marten as part of its ongoing effort to, as a news release says, "determine whether or not the marten populations in coastal northern California and coastal Oregon should receive Endangered Species Act protections."

This process began in 2010 when environmental groups petitioned the agency to list the Humboldt marten under the federal Endangered Species Act. In 2012 the groups sued the agency to hurry up.

The agency seeks specific information, including (according to the notice of the scoping session) on the animal's habitat requirements, genetics and taxonomy.

State Insurance Investigation

Regulators have launched an investigation into whether Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield of California violated state law by misleading consumers with inaccurate provider lists, the Los Angeles Times reported on June 20.

The California Department of Managed Care has begun a review looking into provider access issues with the two insurance giants' plans offered under Covered California, the state insurance exchange set up under the Affordable Care Act.

"Our preliminary investigation gave us good cause to believe there are violations of the law," agency spokeswoman Marta Green told the Times.

Care Home Operator Appeals Suspension

The operator of Chamberlain's Residential Care Facility in Eureka is appealing the state's decision to shut the home down in May and issue a temporary suspension of her license. The suspension will be permanent if the order prevails in court.

The state's order alleged that operator Gina Chamberlain violated numerous health and safety codes, including instances (specifically detailed in the order) of stealing money, property and narcotics from her clients. The state's complaint asked that she be prohibited "for the remainder of [her] life" from having anything to do with a state-licensed care facility.

Chamberlain's appeal denies all of the suspension order's allegations, calling them variously "constitutionally infirm due to a lack of certainty," "uncertain" and "unclear," and adding that they "lack the specificity required to place her on notice to a degree that she is able to defend herself against said allegations."

Her appeal also says she wasn't served the accusation properly.

Suzi Fregeau, with the Long-Term Care Ombudsman Program for Humboldt and Del Norte counties, says she was "extremely surprised" Chamberlain appealed the decision, considering "all the evidence that was collected before the temporary suspension order was even issued — a year's worth of evidence."

Brinton Resigns Arcata Council Seat

Arcata City Councilman Shane Brinton has announced that he will resign his seat on the council effective tomorrow.

In a brief statement at the start of Wednesday night's council meeting, Brinton said he was stepping down to devote more time to his family, specifically to care for his ill mother.

First elected to the council as a 21-year-old in 2008, Brinton was re-elected in 2012 for a term that runs through 2016.

Brinton's resignation leaves the five-member council potentially with three seats coming up for election in November, as both Mayor Mark Wheatley and Councilwoman Alex Stillman's seats are up. The council has a couple of options as to how to fill Brinton's seat: It could let the voters pick Brinton's successor in November or it could opt to appoint a replacement itself. Brinton urged the council to go the election route. If the council opts to let voters fill the seat, it would have to decide before July 13 to get it on the November ballot. If the council makes the decision

Army Corps Halts Willits Bypass Work

If you've driven through Willits lately, you've noticed the tan swaths of fill swooping through pasture along the east side of U.S. 101 and the spindly wooden forms revealing the future configuration of the Willits Bypass.

bypass, saying in a notice dated June 20 that Caltrans has failed to follow the mitigation and monitoring plan agreed upon in February 2012, despite repeated urging by the Corps in emails and in-person visits over the past two years.

The plan details how Caltrans will protect wetlands and other waters in the project area, or mitigate for their loss. Caltrans also is required to submit mitigation and monitoring plans to state agencies, and in fact on June 13 the North Coast Regional Water Quality Control Board approved one of them.

The Corps says Caltrans is behind schedule in implementing mitigations for impacts on wetlands already occurring, hasn't set up a mechanism to pay for ongoing mitigation and monitoring, and hasn't updated the mitigation plan to reflect changes in scheduling.

Among the mitigations that were supposed to have begun is rehabilitation of some 345 acres of off-site ranchland and restoration of another roughly 70 acres of wetland and streams, all to compensate for some 65 acres of wetland impacted directly by the bypass.

Caltrans spokesman Phil Frisbie said Tuesday that while Caltrans has been updating the Corps about changes in the schedule through emails and in person, it has not formally updated the mitigation plan itself. He said Caltrans was scheduled to meet with the Army Corps June 24 to find out exactly what the Corps wants. In the meantime, he says, Caltrans can, with permission from the Corps, continue to work on areas of the project where wetlands won't be further impacted.

The suspension is conditional upon Caltrans meeting the Corps' demands.

Lion Stories

Man vs. nature in one of Humboldt's rural communities

By Grant Scott-Goforth

When she closes her eyes, Marianne Way can sometimes still picture the teeth. It was around three in the afternoon in October 2008, and Way was taking advantage of a break in the rain to replace a light-bulb at the edge of her Fieldbrook driveway. The fixture stuck out of the ground in a small landscaped thicket just a few feet from the garage. Her year-old Manx cat Flash padded along behind her.

She was about to bend over to grab the light, when she saw movement in the bushes in front of her. A mountain lion — “150 pounds at least,” she says — darted out of the shadows past her, snatched her kitty and disappeared past the garage into her property's woods.

“I was really traumatized,” she says. “For three weeks I did not go outside.”

When her nerves returned, Way went to the edge of the rolling lawns in her backyard to trim some bushes. All of a sudden, her eyes focused on a shape past a stump in the woods. Just a few feet away was the lion, watching her. “When I looked up there was only a mesh netting between me and the mountain lion,” she says. “I kind of walked backward towards the grass. When I was far enough away, I started to run.”

From the window of her house, Way says she watched the lion for some time before it sauntered away into the forest. “I could've got a gun and shot him through the window because he didn't move.”

Encounters between mountain lions and humans or their pets are very uncommon, but they are a reality in rural areas like Fieldbrook. That tiny community is a microcosm of Humboldt County's various philosophies on humans and nature, a perfect example of how societies react to nature's encroachments — or humans' encroachments, depending on your view.

Mountain lions hold a special place in the human mind, whether they're regarded with fear, reverence or calculated reality. As a new study of North Coast mountain lions gets off the ground, residents debate what they can do to protect themselves, their pets, their livestock — and their livelihoods.

Ways' encounter with the lion was years ago, but recent sightings kicked up a flurry of rumors and debate in Fieldbrook earlier this month. On June 3, residents began posting about lions on both of Fieldbrook's community Facebook pages.

“Mountain Lion has been spotted a few times near Wilson Lane,” wrote CindyLou Chapman-LeGrand. “Many Fieldbrook cats are missing. Keep your pets inside, food inside, and be vigilant! It will move on!”

For several weeks before and after the sightings, people posted about missing cats that they feared had turned into mountain lion meals. The sightings prompted Fieldbrook School to tell its students not to play along the wooded south and west school fence lines. Both Facebook groups work as sounding boards for a connected and tight-knit community. The groups are forums for all kinds of activity, from aggressive dogs to decorating for the eighth grade graduation. Fifth District Supervisor Ryan Sundberg's often on there giving people updates on power outages or answering other community questions.

The pages tend to keep a clear focus on pets, livestock and wildlife, so there's no surprise a mountain lion sighting would end up there.

But the Facebook pages also highlight the misconceptions that surround America's most notorious predator and a deep divide over the community's philosophies of how to deal with them.

Mountain lions are elusive, solitary hunters, which likely adds to their mystique. "They're really one of the most far-ranging carnivores," says Humboldt State University Wildlife Department Chair Micaela Gunther. "They're up in the mountains with snow and they're down in the deserts of Arizona. They're amazing with the areas that they can cover and adapt to."

Despite that, Gunther says, "Over their range they don't have a really large interaction with people."

Mountain lion attacks on humans are rare yet well publicized. North Coast residents will no doubt recall the 2007 attack on a Fortuna man in Prairie Creek Redwoods State Park. It is Humboldt County's only recorded attack and the man survived after his wife was able to fend off the lion. Since 1986, only 14 verified attacks on humans have occurred in California. Three of those were fatal.

"Those numbers are so, so small," Gunther says. "You're more likely to die from being stung by a bee or struck by lightning."

Gunther says attacks in human-inhabited areas are most often carried out by young, inexperienced lions or desperate, sick or malnourished ones.

Even seeing lions is rare, says California Department of Fish and Wildlife spokesman Andrew Hughs. "Most reports are cats, coyotes or dogs," he says.

For the most part, Gunther suspects, lions avoid areas where humans live and travel. "I don't think they do like hanging around people. I think they are shy by nature."

But little is known about lion habits on the North Coast. Gunther, who specializes in carnivore behavior, recently began a pilot study in Redwood National and State Parks with Jared Duquette, a research ecologist with the Arcata-based Institute for Wildlife Studies.

"We don't really know much, at least from a scientific standpoint, how mountain lions are actually using the park at any given time," Duquette says, which prompted the two to design a study that will use cameras to record mountain lion activity near trails in the parks. A master's student in 2004 monitored nine lions with radio collars. "She was able to describe their general habitat associations and how they avoided roads," Duquette says. "But we don't have any idea how mountain lions are using trails."

If they're successful with the pilot study, expanded research could give insight into the density of lion populations and the potential for future conflicts with hikers in the redwoods.

Despite the unknowns, or maybe because of them, misconceptions are rampant.

"I think it's become a mythical type fear or misunderstanding," Gunther says. "And maybe a frustration about not being able to protect yourself."

People can protect themselves from mountain lions, though the predators have protections of their own. The mountain lion's listing as a "specially protected" species came as the result of a 1990 state ballot measure that, perhaps unsurprisingly, saw emotional reactions on both sides of the issue. But that battle didn't come about to save a species — even the bill's proponents admitted at the time that lions, which were a game mammal in the state, were not threatened by hunting.

The protection came about more as a real estate measure than a biological one, according to a 1990 Los Angeles Times article. "Corridors of natural habitat must be preserved to maintain the genetic integrity of California's wildlife," the initiative read, and the Times wrote that it "would create the Habitat Conservation Fund to spend $30 million a year for 30 years to buy and reserve wildlife habitat."

Some environmentalists opposed the measure because they felt the money could be better spent on species facing larger threats than the mountain lion, but the measure passed with 52 percent of the vote. An attempt in 1997 to repeal the protections was defeated.

So the mountain lion remains “specially protected,” meaning it cannot be hunted and can only be killed under certain circumstances. Illegally killing a mountain lion (or injuring, possessing, transporting, importing or selling one) can get you a year in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Hughan, of the Department of Fish and Wildlife, explains the scenarios in which a lion can legally be killed.

The first, and most common, comes after a mountain lion kills livestock. The animals’ owners (pets are excluded, it must be saleable livestock) must report the attack to Fish and Wildlife, which sends a game warden to verify that the attack was carried out by a lion and not, say, loose dogs. If there’s enough evidence that a mountain lion killed the animal, the warden can issue a depredation permit — a onetime license to kill the specific lion that killed the rancher’s animal. It expires 10 days after it’s issued. “Obviously you won’t know which lion it is,” Hughan says. But “they’re very spread out and very territorial.” A lion that comes back within a short period is likely the same one that killed the livestock.

SOURCE: CALIFORNIA DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND WILDLIFE

You can also kill a mountain lion if it poses an imminent danger — “If you are out feeding your chickens and a lion jumps on your fence and you feel threatened,” Hughan suggests. An incident like that has to be reported to Fish and Wildlife immediately, and a warden will investigate the claim. Still, Hughan says, spontaneous killings almost never happen, and he can’t think of a case where one occurred in Humboldt County.

Since 1972, 333 depredation permits were issued for mountain lions locally with 172 lions taken during that period.

Killing a lion can be problematic, says Gunther.

“If there’s a carnivore coming back and taking goats, they might be a real threat for communities,” she says. Those are often the sick, young or desperate lions — “fringe” lions. “Taking out a lion like that with a depredation permit may not have a terrible impact.”

But because lions are so territorial and cover a lot of ground, taking a dominant male out of the population could open up a space for another, more risky fringe lion. Experienced adult lions, the common thought is, are less likely to interact with humans or even approach areas where people live, travel or recreate. “Whether that’s happening here or not I’m not really certain,” she says. And that’s part of the point of her study. “That has to be in a pretty saturated environment,” she says. “I don’t want people to falsely believe that means lions are trying to break in from everywhere.”

Fieldbrook’s conversations on how to deal with lions range wildly.

When the Facebook groups began reporting sightings, Marianne Way joined in to tell about her encounter and suggest that Fish and Wildlife be contacted. Others disagreed, including CindyLou Chapman-LeGrand, who wrote, “Please realize if you call Animal Control or Fish and Game, they will HUNT the cougar, not ‘relocate’ him. It’s a death sentence for the cat. ... I hate to see it hunted down and die a horrific terrifying death because we pulled the panic trigger too soon.”

Way responded, saying if she had another encounter, “I shoot him in a heartbeat, because it could of been me, it was not a pretty sight.”

“Why the hate?” LeGrand responded. “I have dealt with Mt Lion in the past, and had to call [and] have it killed when it displayed abnormal and threatening behavior. NO, I’m not saying it should eat critters or kids, get a grip! I am saying not to panic, do the smart thing and keep your pets and kids close and indoors during risky hours, and be vigilant (not stupid!).”

Way talks about the dispute as she walks through her yard one sunny Friday. While her husband chases deer out of her fenced vegetable garden, Way points out where she encountered the lion years ago. She suspects many lion-loving Fieldbrook residents are recent transplants from more urban areas, like Oakland and L.A., who came to commune with nature without a real understanding of what that entails. She says people are too soft on lions, particularly when there are children, pets and livestock in danger — though she says she certainly isn't anti-wildlife: "I like animals just like anyone else."

HUMBOLDT GROWN SINCE 1987

The Fieldbrook Family Market, renovated and reopened about two months ago, is inarguably Fieldbrook's non-virtual social hub. It's also a display of the disparate yet cohesive elements that make Fieldbrook unique.

The airy market is busy around lunchtime, with the lot full of cars and people making grocery runs. The rustic and country-style market advertises kombucha and gluten free products, while the inside of the building is filled with the unmistakable smell of barbecue and bacon. Mike Smith — that day's cashier — hasn't heard any rumors about mountain lion sightings, but the inquiry sends him on an Internet fact-finding mission. How much does a mountain lion weigh? What is its range?

Bridget Winkler interrupts Smith's Googling to buy some ginger ale for sick family members at home. She talks about the lion with familiarity — as though it's a member of the community. "He hasn't really been doing much lately," she says. Though, she adds, some kids recently found a lion tooth in a stump near the schoolyard.

On the following Thursday, around quitting time, it's hard to find an empty barstool at the market. Between bites of bacon-wrapped jalapeño poppers, Rob "The Zombie" Coffman (he got the nickname when he worked the graveyard shift at the post office) says there's plenty of wildlife and other hazards that can take out housecats. "It's gonna be hard to attribute cats disappearing to mountain lions," he says. But that doesn't mean lions aren't around. In fact, he says, he lost a goat to a mountain lion just a couple weeks ago. "We didn't actually see the mountain lion take it," he says. "It went missing."

But he knows it was a lion because it left no trace of the year-and-a-half-old goat, one of three he lets roam his 2-acre property to keep grass down. "Nothing [else] could pick it up over the fence without taking the fence down," he says. "The goat was completely gone." Plus, the rest of the goats have been pretty nervous since. "They kinda let you know something was wrong," he says, adding that they still avoid the corner where there was a musky mountain lion smell after his goat disappeared.

Coffman's son Cody, sitting just a barstool over, chimes in, saying he regularly hears mountain lions at night. "Sometimes it sounds like a woman screaming," he says.

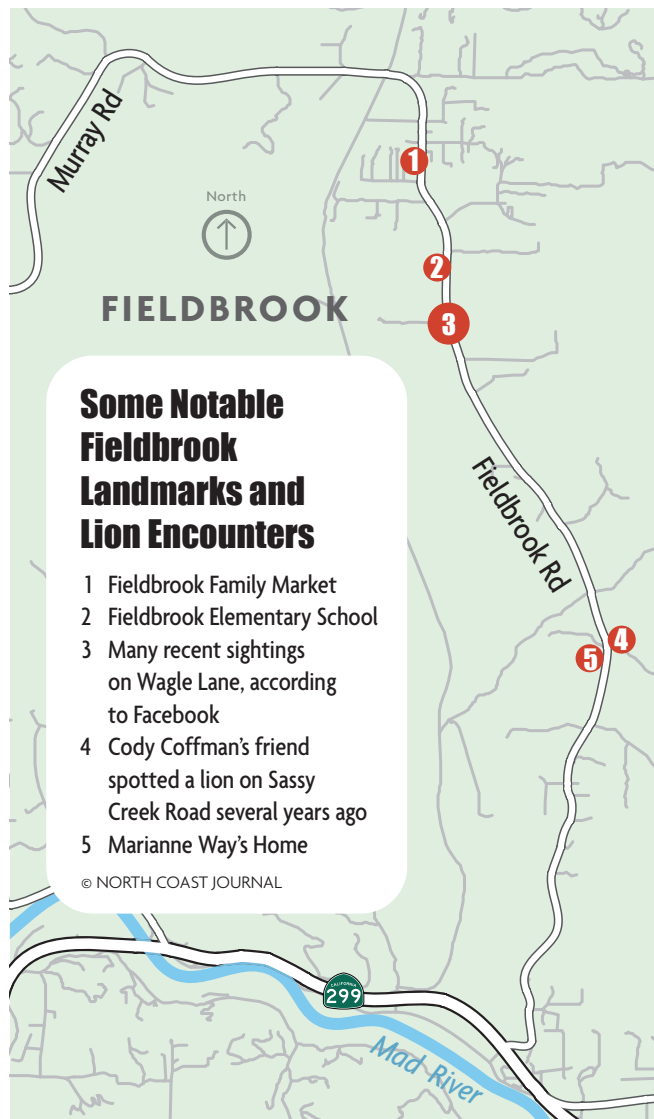

That prompts Cody's friend to relay his only mountain lion sighting, about three years ago on Grassy Creek Lane. It was only a glimpse, but after initially thinking it was a dog, there was no mistaking the low slink of its movements and that tail. A resident pulled up to check his mail right where the cat had disappeared into the bushes moments before and Cody's friend hollered at him to stop. The man thanked him and said "I'll check my mail in the morning."

garbage and prevent attracting animals. Bears, he says, are more of a problem. They push over fences and get in the way. "I'm not one that panics over the wildlife. I wouldn't want to meet a mountain lion face to face," he says. "Living out here — that's just part of it."

He's matter of fact about losing the goat, saying with a wink that the animals are the "best lawnmowers he's ever had." His wife gets attached though, which is why they stopped adopting old rescue goats and getting young ones.

"We were concerned that [the lion] might come back," he says, but adds that it may have selected the goat because it had begun to fall ill. The rest of the goats have been untouched in the subsequent weeks.

Gunther, HSU's wildlife department chair, understands the tricky balance that must be kept between wildlife and humans. She's in favor of the protections mountain lions are allowed. "From my perspective as a wildlife biologist, I think that's fair," she says. "We have encroached on their space. Even on private properties they have the right to wander."

Still, she says, a desire to protect livestock, pets and people is reasonable. "I don't want to be this irrational biologist saying, 'If it means sacrificing a goat, sorry for you, suck it up.'"

Fieldbrook resident Joan Crandell calls herself a "bleeding heart moderate" when it comes to mountain lions. She and her family raise goats, chickens, cows and calves — almost strictly for personal use, though they sell some surplus to friends — so she understands the risks that mountain lions pose to livestock. But her animals are not her livelihood (she's a teacher). "I can afford to have a different perspective," she says.

"I chose to live here so I'm not going to be a NIMBY," she continues. "We create the problem. The animals either hurt somebody or livestock and, rightly so, they have to be terminated or taken out. If you remove those attractions that bring them in you can start to limit the contact you're going to have with them. If they're afraid of humans, hopefully they're not a problem for ranchers."

Crandell is more often concerned with packs of feral or wild neighborhood dogs that kill livestock and pets. But she does anticipate more mountain lions and bears than normal this year as drought forces them farther into inhabited areas in search of water.

While Fish and Wildlife suggest that mountain lion danger is no different in a drought year, Gunther says the animals are attracted to human areas for food, shelter and water.

"It's not clear that this would be worse during a drought year, especially in a water-plentiful area (relatively speaking) like Humboldt County," she says.

Humboldt County is made up of people who differ on humankind's responsibilities when it comes to interacting with and living among wildlife. The debate is at the heart of the controversy over how to develop the county; with a growing population, do we build up or out? Do we conquer or acquiesce to nature? Is there an in-between? Nowhere is the question more relevant than in Fieldbrook, where the fact that such a question can be asked is part of the beauty of living there, says Rob Coffman.

"Everybody has a different viewpoint. And everyone's allowed to have a different viewpoint." ●

Before You Send Your Child Overseas

By Jennifer Savage

1 Everyone will gush, “What an amazing opportunity!” but few people will say, “Oh, yeah, that’s going to rip a chunk of your heart right out as you wave goodbye to your baby whom you’ve spent years protecting from the world only to now fling this being into risk’s open maw.” It’s OK to cry.

2. Even if your child is a hardworking young thing who’s saved up to go on this trip, even if he or she is going through a school program, you’re going to rack up some costs. Proper luggage. A passport. Extra socks. Minimize your expenditures by doing research via Lonely Planet or your friends who’ve traveled to find out what your kid will really need and what’s superfluous. Borrow things, but nothing irreplaceable.

3. Yes, he or she will learn much about a non-American part of the world. Odds are he or she will also gain experience in the international skills of navigation, patience, making friends, solving problems in a foreign tongue: e.g., Which train do I get on? and What is this that I am eating? and Where can I wash my hands? (That last one may be a mother’s wishful thinking. A more likely one might be, Where can I rent a moped?)

4. People in other countries are sexy, what with the accents and all. Also, the thrill of adventure is one of life’s best aphrodisiacs. This is a wonderful time to talk about sexual boundaries, protection and awareness. If you haven’t done that yet, it’s time. If you’re not sure how to start, hit up Planned Parenthood. The people there will help you out.

5. You will never be more thankful for the Internet. You’ll want to download “What’s App,” a texting app that allows you to chat with your child cost-free via Wi-Fi. Even though the kid won’t (and shouldn’t) text you as much as you’d like, you will be fortified to know instant communication is at least an occasional option. Do not be surprised, however, when the texts you receive fail to give an update on the magical experience you’ve helped provide and instead look something like, Can you transfer more money into my account? and It’s good. I’m trying to find a place to poop.

BONUS: While the apple of your eye is off gallivanting and gaining worldly knowledge, you will have a quieter house and in that quiet you will realize that someday it will be like this. While you will never cease worrying, you will, at some point, turn responsibility for your child’s life over to that child, who will be an adult. You will have done the best you can to prepare your offspring for the world and he or she will go out and discover, on his or her own, things about travel and money and safety and love. It will be hard for you, but a small part of your mind, the part not consumed with fretting, will hear the quiet and be grateful for it.

Hum Plate Roundup

We'll need to see some ID

By Jennifer Fumiko Cahill

Does a baby really need candy? Of course not. So what's wrong with taking it? Go ahead and order off the kids' menu.

Little Devils

You know that deviled egg recipe your aunt is so stingy with? Nobody wants it anymore. Instead we'll be trying to recreate the one at Humboldt Smokehouse (310 Fifth St., Eureka), topped with house-smoked bacon or pork belly, barbecue sauce and green onions ($1, $1.50). They have the tiniest bits of tart pickle to balance the richness and, as my companion pointed out, they would be perfect with a cocktail. Which is weirder, bringing your martini into a barbecue joint, or bringing your own hors d'oeuvres to a bar?

My only complaint about the joint is the staff's inability to save me from myself. Because as delicious as it is, the Cincinnati burnt ends sandwich — piled with smoky chunks of meltingly fatty beef brisket — is too much for me to finish comfortably and too good for me to choose comfort ($10 with a side). The children's sandwich, however, with half the meat — still a solid fistful — and a slice of smoked cheddar on a sesame bun, is just as delicious, but doesn't leave me incapacitated ($4). Is this really a child's portion? Michelle Obama may disagree, but if she tucks a napkin into her cardigan and takes a bite, she won't stay mad.

Grown-ass Cookie

Down on the bottom shelf of the cookie case at Ramone's (209 E St., Eureka) are the kiddie treats — animal cutouts sprinkled with sparkly sugar and such. Up top is where they keep the chocolate drop cookie sprinkled with sea salt ($1). It's dark, brownie-soft, lumpy with chocolate chips and falls apart a bit. Don't try to dunk it; that will only end in tears. The salt — a few coarse crystals on top — brings the butteriness and sweetness into relief the way it does in fancy caramel. Don't pretend you're over salted caramel. Nobody is buying it.

This is not a cookie for the kids. Sure, you could broaden their palates, expose them to sophisticated flavors, blah, blah. Or you could keep this one thing for yourself. After all, you vote for things other than American Idol. You deserve a cookie. So when they give you the puppy eyes and ask what you've got there in your little paper bag, look the kids in the eye and tell them that just like swearing, black coffee and The Walking Dead, it's for grown-ups.

One Fish, Two Fish

Some of us can be made happy with breaded fish and chips, but not all. There are those of us who must have a caramel-colored shell of batter to crunch through — one that doesn't slide off the fish or disintegrate with a splash of malt vinegar. Now that Mad River Brewing Company's Tasting Room (101 Taylor Way) has opened its kitchen, such a thing can be had in Blue Lake.

On a recent visit, the beer-battered seasonal fish, chips and slaw ($9.99), was made with Indonesian catfish. Settle down, purists. Cod is lovely, but catfish is firm and flavorful, too, and it withstands being picked up and dipped in the dilly house tartar sauce flecked with pickled red onion. That sauce alone could convert anyone — you'll be dipping fries in it, too. The menu also has a section called "Kids at Heart," which makes it a little less embarrassing to order up a crisp, buttery, plain grilled cheese sandwich ($3.25). ●

ZUZKA SABATA AS LUANN AND MICHAEL FIELDS AS TOMMY DUGAN IN KORBEL V: THE SECRET.

By William S. Kowinski

stagematters@northcoastjournal.com

Since 1992 there have been five episodes (including an unnumbered one) in Dell'Arte's soap opera saga of the working-class Dugan family in the fictional North Coast mill town of Korbel. Korbel V: The Secret, now on stage in the outdoor Rooney Amphitheatre at Dell'Arte in Blue Lake, is intended both as a continuation and "an entirely new Korbel for the present day which would stand on its own," according to writer and director Lauren Wilson's program note.

Tommy Dugan (played by Michael Fields) is back, living in a ramshackle trailer in the woods. Also returning are his estranged wife Lu Ann (this time played by Zuzka Sabata) and Tommy's dead mother, Dorothy (Joan Schirle.)

The new principal characters are

Tommy's callow, young companion Lowell (Anthony Arnista), and Bert (James Peck), a self-styled militia leader exiled from the UK. Yan Christian Collazo plays fledgling sheriff's deputy Manuel, Ryan Musil is the mayor of Korbel, and Bert's militia co-conspirators are a supermarket manager from Glendale (Andrew Eldrege) and a crafter mom from McKinleyville (Emily Newton).

Korbel V begins with Manuel reciting a prologue in rhymed couplets that suggests the opening of Shakespeare's Henry V with an assist from Carl Sandburg. It's the first of several echoes and quotes from Shakespeare and others. The deputy concludes: "Here's Korbel, this is fog, and here is sun." At that moment on opening evening, sunlight broke through the overcast sky and bathed the stage. How did

The Korbel Conspiracy

Is this the end for Dell'Arte's working class soap opera?

they do that? (Yes, the line was scripted.)

The action begins with Tommy in a terminal funk: 17 years unemployed, a failed marriage and a pot grower son who won't speak to him are bad enough, but now his doctor demands he stop drinking.

After a clumsily creative suicide attempt fails, Tommy learns that the Korbel Timber mill is closing and will evict families living in company housing. Suddenly he finds purpose: a hunger strike to save the mill, emulating the hero he saw on the History Channel, "Mohammed Gandhi."

But his resolve is tested when Lu Ann shows up, promising love, as well as reconciliation with his son, who has provided his mother a lavish Eureka lifestyle financed by what she calls his "firewood business."

Meanwhile, Bert organizes an armed revolt against government oppression. By the end, the stage is littered with a Shakespearean tragedy-load of bodies (though not all of them dead) and a certain body part familiar from Macbeth.

There are magical moments: Fields and Schirle are irresistible together, and Fields delivering Tommy's final soliloquy is memorable. The principal actors have built real characters (especially Arnista as Lowell and Sabata as Lu Ann) and the supporting players are generously funny, particularly Eldrege as one of the conspirators.

Less high-spirited than some past summer shows, this play is well crafted and directed, with the usual comic local references, physical humor, surprise effects and other treats of sight and sound, including music by Tim Gray, performed by Sabata and the band, Marla Joy, Mike La Bolle and Tim Randles.

But I found the two overlapping storylines disappointing, with too little of Tommy's narrative and too much of Bert's (even with its perceptive twist at the end). Bert's paranoid rants seem too frequent, long and unvarying, familiar from weary years of talk radio and Internet rhetoric, except for the copious spewing of "wanker" and "bollocks" by this incongruously English character.

"The Secret" in the play's title refers most obviously to the movie and book about the power of positive thinking that Lu Ann praises. While some in the audience got the reference, I'm not sure why a 2006 self-help fad features so prominently.

At the end of the play, it seems the Dugan saga is over — but maybe not. One more dancing Dugan ghost has been added, but somewhere offstage is the next generation.

Korbel V: The Secret runs through July 6.

Coming Up

Next at the fest: Taken Away, an acrobatic theatre event, opens June 21 for five performances. Clowns Without Borders gets the Prize of Hope on June 28 and a benefit headlined by clown Mooky Cornish on June 29 at 2 p.m. Then Cornish performs at the Blue Lake Center of the Universe party at 4:30.

On July 2, Mad Lab gives us three works in progress by Dell'Arte alums: "Camel Camel," a vaudeville review by Glitter Gizzard, Janessa Johnsrude and Meghan Frank; "Life Lessons with Pat McKensie," a satirical comedy by Emily Newton; and "La Fenetre," a clown comedy by Darci Fulcher and Emily Newton. It's followed on July 5 by Red Lights in Blue Lake, an adult cabaret. 668-5663, www.dellarte.com.

Next, and not at the fest, is a comedy by Christopher Durang called Vanya and Sonia and Masha and Spike, which previews at Redwood Curtain on July 3 and opens on July 5. This 2013 Tony Award winner is a takeoff on Chekhov characters set in contemporary America that rewards but does not require prior knowledge of Chekhov. I've been looking forward to this one all year. Directed by Jyl Hewston, it features Christina Jioras, Gloria Montgomery, Mira Eagle, Nadia Adame, Giovanni Alva and Raymond Waldo. 443-7688, www.redwoodcurtain.com. ●

Musical phlegm flam

You think it's funny, but it's snot

By Jennifer Savage

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

I recently found myself sucked into a debate about whether a band member deliberately shooting snot rockets and spitting onto the audience during a show improved or diminished the live music experience. The guy who attended the gig thought being the target of bodily fluid projectiles ramped up the excitement. Most of the rest of us said, "Ew."

At this point in my life, I've seen over 2,000 bands. I've seen lesbian folk acts, old school punks, art rockers and grunge heroes. I've seen drummers get naked, singers swing from the ceiling, guitarists bleed from their fingers, a doorman puke from being so grossed out by Haunted Garage's horror show — all the usual stuff and then some. A lot of really good bands, several really lousy ones and many, many forgettable acts. At no point in time ever did I think, "You know what would make this show better? If the accordionist would ramp it up even more by discharging a loogie on me!" But, hey, to each their own.

Thursday: Choose your poison

Now, if you're looking for something out of the ordinary that, as far as I know, does not involve someone else's mucus accompanying the music, please be thrilled that The Slow Poisoner is coming to the Little Red Lion on Thursday night. Andrew Goldfarb started out as the leader of a five-piece band, The Slow Poisoners, named after a chapter in Charles Mackay's 1854 book Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular

WHO: The Slow Poisoner

WHEN: Thursday, June 26, 9 p.m.

WHERE: Little Red Lion

TICKETS: Free

Delusions and the Madness of Crowds, which detailed a murderous fad among 17th Century European wives. Now it's just Goldfarb, who bills himself as "a cross between Johnny Cash and Alice Cooper" — rootsy, but weird like a late-night horror movie host or a creepy camp counselor. The Cramps are an obvious (and excellent) influence. Based on watching several wacky (and well-done) videos, you can expect songs about headless chickens and hot rod worms, props that include painted signs and dancing spiders, and a show that will entertain to cataclysmic proportions. The music starts around 9 p.m., show is 21-and-over.

Saturday: Hey, youth!

Sometimes a music lover gets jaded, wonders what happened to the youth. When did they stop playing guitar? Why are all the rockers in A-town over 40? But then comes along the melodic and crunchy High Crimes, which will infuse a much-needed dose of talented 20-somethings into the scene at Hum Brews on Saturday night. Kimmy Kennedy's singing ranges from ethereal to striking, inspiring infatuation from her first note in "Punks of Jazz" from the band's eponymous debut. Bandmates Harrison Laver (guitar, vocals), Ben James (bass/vox) and Alyssa Jung (drums) provide a perfectly balanced blend of restraint and attack. Get to know them, along with Neighbors and Wrecks Goliath starting around 10 p.m. Cover's $5, show is 21-and-over.

WHO: Bent Knee

WHEN: Monday, June 30, 9 p.m.

Saturday: SCOD V

Meanwhile, over at the Alibi, The Songwriter Circle Of Death V will spin you right round, baby, with four mics, four guitars and four individual performers in the form of The Hill's Burly Dent, the Yosemite Weavetone's Christopher Weaver, Courtney Jaxon of The Lost Luvs/The Monster Women and one-man prince of disinterest, TheBoredAgain. Things begin to roll around 10:30 p.m. with a $5 cover charge and, yes, be 21-or-over.

Monday: Get Bent

The Little Red Lion is owning this week with a Monday night gig by Boston's Bent Knee, an atmospheric, avant-garde experience. One could invoke both Radiohead and Ravel in attempting to explain the impressionist nature of Bent Knee. Local good timers The Tweeners and The Fairy Rings open.

Little Red is a bar, so do not attempt to attend this show if you are not yet of legal drinking age. Everyone else, the show starts around 9 p.m. and as far as the Internet is concerned, there's no cover.

Tuesday: See bands in an actual record store!

Don't despair, however, under-twenty-ners! The Works hosts The Trashies, Seattle/Oakland's premiere post-hardcore psychedelic '60s grunge garage act, along with local lovely lady retro rockers The Lost Luvs and all ages are invited. Be prepared to dance starting at 8 p.m.

Etc.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Eight Days a Week calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com. And do let me know if you get spit on.

The Westminster Kennel Club has come and gone for the year, but you can get your local quaffed canine fix at the Lost Coast Kennel Club Dog Show (free, $3 parking). The three-day exhibition of obedience, conformation and general adorability is being held at the Humboldt County Fair Grounds from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., June 27 through June 29.

The Jefferson Community Center is quickly becoming the place to be. The folks there are stepping up their game with the MARZ (Music and Art Resource Zone) project.

The next installment features all things hip-hop with performance by Gobi, Maniac, Eternal Thought and more on Friday, June 27 from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. ($2-$5 sliding scale). It's all ages and the proceeds benefit MARZ.

The Kate Wolf Music Festival (prices vary by ticket type) is back with a weekend full of live music, vendors, acrobatic performers, kids' activities and more. This year, performers include Joan Baez, Los Lobos and many, many more. So, grab your sunscreen and water bottle and get yourself down to the Black Oak Ranch in Laytonville from Friday, June 27 to Sunday June 29. Musicians usually take the stage around noon and play all day.

Roll 'Em!

It doesn't matter if you prefer comedies, dramas, westerns or horror, if you're a HumCo film fan, you have a lot to look forward to this summer. In addition to the new releases hitting theaters over the next few months, you also have three film series to choose from, plus the normal (normal?) selection of cult favorites at the Arcata Theatre Lounge.

The Eureka Theater presents Fourth Friday Flix ($5), screening classic or cult films dirt cheap. The summer season kicks off with George Cukor's 1939 comedy, The Women, on June 27 at 7:30 p.m. Joan Crawford leads the all-female cast in a film about gossip, glamour, manicures and man trouble.

Los Bagels in Arcata invites you to bring a comfy chair and a blanket for its Movies Under the Mural series on the last Saturday of every month. The series starts with a showing of Disney's Frozen on Saturday, June 28 at 9 p.m. There doesn't seem to be a kid alive who doesn't love this movie and its addictive soundtrack, so grab the little ones and head down for a movie and some free popcorn.

The Arcata Theatre Lounge continues to be a go-to for film buffs and movie nerds alike. How strong is your kung fu? Enter the Dragon, starring the sinewy Bruce Lee plays Friday, June 27 at 8 p.m. ($5). If you were a child of the '80s and '90s, you'll want to head to there on Sunday, June 29 at 6 p.m. for the screening of Goonies ($5). If corny sci-fi is more your thing, then be there Wednesday, June 2 at 6:30 p.m., when Sci Fi Pint & Pizza Night features the 1979 space thriller The Alpha Incident (free with $5 purchase). Netflix be damned, you've got other plans.

Festival for All

It's hard to describe Dell'Arte to people who aren't from around these parts. There are clowns and theater and giant, costumed people on stilts, but none of those encapsulate the essence of Dell'Arte. It's the sort of thing you just have to see to understand. The Mad River Festival is the perfect way to introduce new people to the talent and oddity of Dell'Arte. The festival runs from June 19 to August 3 with an eclectic mix of performances.

Start with some classic circus skills at Taken Away ($12, $10 students, $8 kids) at the Carlo Theatre. The showcase of acrobatic talents plays Wednesday, June 25 at 8 p.m., Thursday, June 26 at 10:30 p.m. and Friday, June 27 at 10:30 p.m.

If you're looking for something more interactive, head to Dell'Arte's Big Top Tent on Sunday, June 29. The Center of the Universe Party (free) starts at 3:30 p.m. Patronus will provide live music while you interact with clowns, acrobats and more. This is definitely somewhere you need to take your non-coulrophobic (clown-fearing) kids. They might also enjoy Clowns Without Borders at 2 p.m. in the Big Top ($10, $5 kids).

There's more festival clownery and tomfoolery coming in July, so check back in at northcoastjournal.com for more information.

Jersey Snore

Pearce and Pattinson shine in Rover

By John J. Bennett

filmland@northcoastjournal.com

Reviews

JERSEY BOYS. When I visited New York years ago, the Four Seasons musical Jersey Boys was on Broadway and everywhere else in the city: billboards, the hotel TV's information channel — it was inescapable. At the time, I thought disinterestedly, Who gives a shit? Now that I've seen Clint Eastwood's stodgy, stagy, overlong adaptation I find myself asking the same question all over again.

The movie opens in 1951 New Jersey. Young Frankie Valli, then Castalucio (John Lloyd Young), finds himself drawn into his friend Tommy DeVito's (Vincent Piazza) late night habits of thievery and singing in nightclubs. The singing proves to be more reliably profitable, and they make a go of it as a band, bringing along Nick (Michael Lomenda) from the neighborhood on bass. Through their friend Joe Pesci (yeah, same one), they meet hotshot songwriter Bob Gaudio (Erich Bergen). So begins the dominance of the Four Seasons over the early-1960s American airwaves.

It comes as no surprise that the group's rise to fame and fortune is complicated by personal conflict, dishonesty and loss. That's the thing about Jersey Boys: There are no surprises. Tommy's gambling gets out of hand; Frankie's daughter is out of control; nobody's marriage works because they're on the road all the time. If you've seen a musical biopic, or any rags to riches story, you've seen all this before.

Because Eastwood directs, the movie is well dressed and appointed. He also saddles it with the same washed-out color palette and pancake makeup that made J. Edgar (2011) so tough to take seriously. The closing sequence of this one, which takes place at the Four Seasons' 1990 Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction ceremony, is a vivid example of how not to age actors on screen.

Enjoying this requires a committed effort from the audience. If one is a fan of the music, or of Broadway, or wants some of the Jersey period details of Goodfellas without the excitement, then it might work. Barring all that, it doesn't resonate. R. 134m.

THE ROVER. Guy Pearce with a merciless thousand-yard stare, wandering the post-apocalyptic Australian wasteland? That's more up my alley. Written and directed by David Michod (Hesher, Animal Kingdom), The Rover takes place "10 years after the collapse." Pearce's solitary penitent finds himself at odds with a group of killers after they steal his car. In pursuing them, he stumbles across their wounded accomplice Rey (Robert Pattinson) and enlists him to help recover the stolen property. And that's just about the whole plot.

The Rover is a bleak, misanthropic study in violence and atmosphere, its frightening desert quiet punctuated frequently by gunshots to the head. The sparse dialogue is mostly uncomfortable, reinforcing the hopelessness.

Pearce, great as always, plays the part with a fearsome, icy intensity. Pattinson, taking on the riskier role, does a shockingly good turn. His character could easily deteriorate into pantomime or caricature, but Pattinson invests Rey with pathos and honesty that make all his mumbles and facial tics all the more sad and out of place.

In my younger, moodier days, I would likely have called this my favorite movie of the year. But the oppressing cynicism and gritty contempt of The Rover were a little much by the end. It is artfully photographed and exceptionally well acted, but its labored effort to be INTENSE undercuts some of the subtler, more troubling undertones of the performances. R. 102m.

AMENDED
NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF
JOYCE MARIE FULLER
CASE NO. PR140137

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, JOYCE MARIE FULLER

A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by PATRICIA ANN JOHNSON In the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt. THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that PATRICIA ANN JOHNSON

Be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.

THE PETITION requests the decedent's will and codicils, if any, be admitted to probate. The will and any codicils are available for examination in the file kept by court. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on July 10, 2014 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept: 8.

IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at the trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the high bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property.

NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires the information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (707) 268-1205 or visit this Internet Web site, using the file number assigned to this case 2014F001. Information about postponement that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web Site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale.
